- 5) Titolo sintetico e breve descrizione dell'attività/progetto da svolgere:

Urban Life Quality: subjective perception and objective measurement

L'attività di ricerca da svolgersi presso il Senseable City Lab (MIT), inquadrandosi nel nelle teorie della Flexible City e della Healthy City, vuole indagare la correlazione tra i dati soggettivi raccolti sulla percezione dei rischi urbani e della qualità urbana (i.e. Better Life Index, OECD) e i dati oggettivamente desunti da rilevazioni statistiche e fisiche (i.e. Breathelife2030; Heat – Health Economic Assessment Tool) per evidenziare le disparità e le similitudini tra i diversi dati raccolti. Le elaborazioni possono essere eseguite anche in tempo reale utilizzando i nuovi strumenti che caratterizzano le Smart city: devices personali indossabili e facilmente trasportabili (smartphone), piattaforme di indagine e survey (questionari), tool di scala urbana (centraline per il rilevamento delle condizioni di traffico, agenti inquinanti dell'aria, condizioni metereologiche).

I cittadini nelle aree urbane sono esposti a elementi e situazioni ambientali stressanti (inquinamento atmosferico, rumore, calore) i quali si ripercuotono negativamente sulla salute e sulla qualità della vita. Sono numerosi gli studi che evidenziano la correlazione tra la salute umana e l'esposizione ai fattori ambientali in particolare nei luoghi di residenza e di lavoro, mentre risultano meno diffusi quelli relativi alle persone in movimento (popolazione come entità dinamica e non statica) nelle zone urbanizzate e, soprattutto, alla percezione umana della propria esposizione ai fattori di rischio ambientale.

L'approccio che caratterizza il Senseable City Lab è multidisciplinare e coinvolge figure quali designers, planners, ingegneri, fisici, biologi e studiosi di scienze sociali. Questo permette la lettura della città (intesa come sistema urbano funzionale complesso), del rapporto city user/città e della correlazione percezione soggettiva/dato oggettivo da differenti punti di vista, andando di volta in volta a sviluppare e ad approfondire le tematiche chiave e gli elementi principali di interesse
